

April 2020 - Ian Hodgson and the iPad Group

The number of emails which I received from our iPad group when Ian died so suddenly testifies to his importance to us. We were a mixed group of beginners and experienced iPad users, but Ian had something for all of us. Some were happy just to be started on the path to using their tablets efficiently for everyday purposes, others were keen to find out how far they could go and all that they could do. For each Ian had time and patience. He came to every meeting prepared with ideas and he was kept constantly on the go with people asking questions, demanding help and telling what disasters had happened to them in the last month. He was patient, kind and willing to adapt.

We shall miss him very badly, but we know that this is a particularly bad time for his family to be left alone and think how much more important he was to them.
